Intro to Sociology
Be The Change

In my opinion, the world (specifically the United States) revolves entirely too much around politics. The reason that I feel this way is simple. We live in a society where politics and/or political agendas seem to be tied into every sort of media possible; this even includes children's movies at times. It's almost impossible to have a discussion over politics and societal opinions without sparking a heated argument. I've seen tension created among the strongest relationships, such as families, simply over disagreeing on political beliefs. It's very frustrating and disheartening to me to see this happening in the world. It's not much, but my way of helping fix this problem involves keeping my mouth shut as much as possible when it comes to political discussions; I most often keep my opinions to myself. If I ever find myself in the middle of a conversation that has turned political, I keep quiet and usually try to find a way to shut the discussion down before it gets too ugly. I truly feel that if people didn't argue over politics so much, and maybe even got better at just accepting and respecting other people's opinions, the world would feel like a much more peaceful place.