I think one thing that needs to change is the ability to understand that we are all different. No two people are the same. Just because one person has had an experience does not mean that another will understand it. I want to make changes by becoming a therapist and helping people see that change needs to happen within themselves. People need tools to understand themselves and others. If we try to look at the world through another's eyes, we can live with each other in an understanding way.
